

ABSTRACT

The invention provides an improved method for isolating or characterizing genes in a second or target plant species that have substantial sequence identity to at least a portion of a gene in a first or template plant species.